In this video Dr Katie Carpenter discusses the difficult passage of the Reform Act of 1832. At the beginning of the 19th century, Parliament was tightly controlled by wealthy landowners, many of whom were members of the House of Lords. The Reform Act of 1832 was a landmark piece of legislation that reformed the electoral system in Great Britain. It was the first of a series of reforms that would eventually lead to the modern democratic system we have today. The Act was passed after a long and difficult process, with many debates and amendments. It was a significant step towards the democratization of the British political system. The Act gave the vote to a larger number of men, but it still excluded the majority of the population. It was a step in the right direction, but there was still a long way to go. The Act was a result of the pressure from the middle class, who wanted more say in the government. It was a response to the demands for reform that had been growing since the 18th century. The Act was a landmark in the history of the British political system, and it paved the way for further reforms in the years to come.
